

Charla Aldous Brent Walker

CIVIL TRIAL LAW

Carlos Rojas made money hanging Christmas lights.
Until he fell.

Even that shouldn't have been a big deal, really. Rojas broke his leg and busted up his knee. Surgery would fix it. But that surgery left him in a coma. Now, doctors said, he had a brain injury that left him unable to walk, talk, eat or do any of the other things he used to do.

He will need constant care for the rest of his days.

The doctor and nurse providing anesthesia said they weren't responsible, but a jury said otherwise and awarded Rojas millions. The amount isn't important.

What is important is that he had lawyers Charla Aldous and Brent Walker on his side. The two of them regularly represent the underdogs in legal cases against much larger corporate interests.

Winning those cases is not a guarantee; it never is. But what clients can count on is that they will get the very best that Aldous and Walker can bring to the case.

All of their passion. All of their intellect. All of their experience.

It's an approach that has landed them on the D Magazine list of Best Lawyers in Dallas over and over again. And one that makes their clients happy to have found them.
